“ I called Angie on March 3rd at 8:35 a.m. from my truck as I was heading to Centerville and asked to review the prior 5 minutes of security footage of the rear entrance to the bank...she asked if I was okay as she was reviewing footage and why. As she hit the point of me nearly wiping out on the wet pavement walking to my truck she began laughing hysterically. I told her to laugh it up, just keep watching. As I struggle to regain my footing downhill, I had suddenly slammed my laptop and iPad bag down on the blacktop to gain stability...she quit laughing and asked if they were okay. I told her she was going to be my first visit when I returned to the bank to get her help. They were fine and I was fine, but that laugh was what I was looking for, even at the expense of my own pride. She only shared the footage with half the bank, and probably laughed with everyone the same as she did the first time she saw it. I will miss working with her, her sense of humor, and her belief in what we were doing everyday.
