“ There are no words to describe what it was like to meet you for the first time and then having to say goodbye to you all on the same day. I thank God for the beautiful time we got to spend with you. Thank you for bringing out the best in us and teaching us how special each day really is. We love you and look forward to seeing you again.

Brady and Cassie, you were the first in our family to go through such a traumatic experience, I am so thankful you allowed us to be with you. I am so proud of the both of you, you gave Baby James the very best. I know the past few months have been hard and now this week even harder, I wish we could take this pain away but I know we can't. If there is anything we can do to help you get through these next few days, weeks and months just let us know. We love you all so much.

“ The day I saw the post from Brady on Facebook was the day my heart sank!! I can not imagine your pain and even the short time you had with your son. Sometimes words are meaning less at times like this because the pain in your hearts has to be excruciating. I can only offer my heartfelt sympathy and maybe some kind of consolation letting you know James felt your Love and I thank the Lord you had that time with him at the least. There is a saying I love." I might not be able to touch you or see you but I can feel your presence in everything I do.. No one can take those moments away from you!! My blessings and Prayers for you always and forever!!

“ James; You were with us such a short time, but we will never forget you. When your mom and dad told me about you we had a few short weeks to happily anticipate your arrival, wondering who you would look like, what color would your eyes be, and even whether you would be a boy or girl! What dreams we had for you! We were devastated when, at your 20 week ultrasound, we discovered you would only be with us for such a short while...Still, we hoped for a miracle. The miracle was that you survived long enough to feel the love of your family as we gathered to welcome you into the world, only to say good bye. Love you little guy!
